Playing a role in our everyday lives

April 2019

The Post Collection is an example of eliminating anything extra in order to solely focus on the essential.

For designer Cecilie Manz, creating is about examining the purpose of a piece of furniture. Stripping the concept down to only what's necessary, the form emerges from the function in an expression that's pure and purposeful.

It's this simplicity imbued with a sense of beauty that is at the core of the new Post Collection from Manz. The name is a nod to the former home of the Royal Mail, renovated into our flagship showroom in Copenhagen

Clean, uncluttered lines are the signature traits of the Post Table and Post Chair, each boasting a solid wood frame that reflects our heritage of wood craftsmanship and appreciation for authentic materials.

The Post Chair is upright and unassuming, with clean, classic lines. The plywood seat and back are light yet sturdy, while the arms offer just enough support with a minimal use of space. Add to that the option of an upholstered seat in leather or fabric, and you have a subtle design that could easily fit into a residential setting, restaurant, café or corporate environment.

The perfect partner is the Post Table, featuring a long rectangular table top and matching cylindrical legs. The solid wood frame provides a stable structure for the streamlined table top available in wood veneer. Given the placement of the legs on either end, the result is loads of leg room. An extra advantage to the appeal of this practical table versatile enough to accommodate your need for dining or working, whether in a private, corporate or hospitality venue.

The Post Collection reflects our shared passion for a clean, crisp, uncluttered aesthetic, where each piece involves beautifully crafted wood in proportions that naturally suit the human body.

“My overall aim is always to have a clear argument legitimizing the designs that I make. Function is essential, and if I cannot formulate a good reason for a new product to exist, it is better to refrain from making it.”

- Cecilie Manz

Post Chair is available from September 1st 2019
